

AFRICANS FOOD SOVEREIGNTY WORKING GROUP

The Global Justice Program at UC Berkeley's Haas Institute for a Fair and Inclusive Society invites you to an informal monthly guided discussion on a wide range of issues related to Africa's food systems.

Can Agroecology Bring Solutions to Africa's Food Systems?

Applying ecological science to agriculture and agroecosystems (agroecology) not only promotes low use of external inputs, but also encompasses a wide variety of practices that are coherent with key principles of ecosystem and environment sustainability, social fairness, and economic viability.

Come and join us for a presentation with Alice Martin-Prével, Policy Analyst at the Oakland Institute and contributor to Agroecology Case Studies. Alice will be discussing the tremendous success of agroecological agriculture across the African continent.

Alice Martin-Prével is a Policy Analyst at the Oakland Institute. Her work focuses on access to land, food and agriculture, as well as international institutions' policies and their impact on the right to food and land. She authored several reports and case studies on impact of the World Bank policies on agricultural development as part of the 'Our Land, Our Business' campaign.

FACILITATORS:

Elsadig Elsheikh, Director of the Haas Institute's Global Justice Program
Peiley Lau, Ph.D. student in Agricultural and Resource Economics, UCB

LOCATION
 460 Stephens Hall
 UC Berkeley

WHEN
 Tuesday, April 5
 5:00–6:30pm

CONTACT
peiley@berkeley.edu
elsadig@berkeley.edu