

ENGAGING CONTRADICTIONS: RESEARCH, ACTION, AND JUSTICE

A WORKSHOP SERIES, SPRING 2017

"Engaging Contradictions" is a workshop series focused on issues of pertinence to community engaged scholars and the role of the University in the current political climate. The core of this series is the first-hand experience of individuals, organizations, and movements. We are working to create awareness, share knowledge and tools, and strengthen this community.

Sponsored by:

UC Berkeley Graduate Assembly
Haas Institute for a Fair & Inclusive Society
American Cultures Center
Public Service Center

RESEARCH JUSTICE IN PRACTICE

How can research be part of the voice and power of marginalized communities? What are examples of this and what principles and practices bring this vision to life? This workshop will use interactive formats and practical examples from the experiences of three leading practitioners. All three have been deeply engaged in developing and applying a Research Justice framework, based on values of self-determination for marginalized communities. The workshop will cover principles and strategies for Research Justice, first-hand accounts of communities using this approach, and ample time for discussion and application of the framework to participants' own work. Some of the projects that will be discussed were featured in the recent book, Research Justice: Methodologies for Social Change, edited by Andrew Jolivette.

Featuring:

- Miho Kim, former Executive Director at DataCenter
- Lailan Huen, Oakland-based community organizer
- Claudia Reyes, Mujeres Unidas y Activas

February 23, 2017

Thursday

4:00-7:00 PM

470 Stephens Hall

UC Berkeley

This event is free and open to the public. Please reserve your space online at the following website:

<http://haasinstitute.berkeley.edu/engagingcontradictions>